NEW departure in the history of Exhibitions will be made in the summer of 1886, precisely 101 years since John Adams, the first Minister of the United States who came on a friendly mission to Great Britain, presented his credentials to King George III.

An American Exhibition is to be opened in London on the first of May, 1886.

The idea of thus demonstrating, in the midst of the busy mart of the Old World, the progress made in the pursuits of peace by the principal nation of the Western Hemisphere originated with General C. B. Norton, of Boston, Mass. (to whom Americans are also indebted for the suggestion of the Centennial Exhibition of 1876), and with Mr. John Robinson Whitley, of London.

It has since received the widest and most influential support. The American Exhibition of 1886, entirely devoted to a specific and comprehensive display of the wealth of the United States, will be the first of its kind which has ever been held beyond the limits of the National territory.

The United States Government, the Governors of the most important States and Territories, the Consul-General in London, the great Civic and Commercial Corporations, and a large number of the most distinguished and eminent citizens, including many of the largest American manufacturers, merchants, and producers (a number of whom have already applied for about 100,000 square feet of space) having expressed approval, a complete representation will be given of the arts, inventions, manufactures, products, and resources of the principal nation of the New World.

The advantages to be hoped from such an Exhibition are manifold. The friendly relations between the two countries will be strengthened ; American Inventors, Manufacturers, and Producers will have for the first time an opportunity of presenting to Europeans the many improvements made during the past half-century, while visitors to the Exhibition from all parts of Europe and the Colonies will carry away valuable lessons on the improved modes of production stimulated in America by the dearness of labour.

The Industrial Departments of the Exhibition, in all their varied branches, will invite and attract special attention to the wonderful progress made in the United States of America since the Centennial Exhibition of 1876. Comprising much that has not yet been seen in Europe, the great improvements made by Americans in all branches of labour-saving machinery, especially for the utilisation of Wood and Metals, the practical helps for household purposes, the advantages secured by new motors, and the most recently completed appliances for using the Telegraph and the Telephone, will possess a deep interest for Europeans and visitors from the Colonies.

Arrangements are being entered into by which some of the best of the American exhibits from The World's Exposition in New Orleans, 1884-5, and from the International Exhibition of Antwerp, 1885, will be brought over to, and warehoused in, London, until the opening of the American Exhibition in 1886.

The mere announcement that an American Exhibition will be held in London in 1886 has already awakened the keen rivalry of American Inventors, and it may be stated with confidence that, as the result, a number of new and entirely original inventions will be exhibited by enterprising Americans.

Such an Exhibition—the first of its kind—will doubtless attract as many visitors as the Fisheries Exhibition of 1883, and the International Health Exhibition of 1884, and in no better or more economical way can the great advantages of the United States be presented to the public. It must be borne in mind that there is in London a large transitory population, representing all parts of the world, who will, by means of the proposed Exhibition, have an opportunity of examining American manufactures, and of introducing them into their several countries. In like manner the attention of foreign capital will be attracted to the great railway and mining interests of the United States.

With the co-operation of the Governors of States and of the principal Railway Companies, it is proposed to arrange the Entrance Hall so that the European visitor shall take leave of his native soil, and shall temporarily be in, and commence his visit to North America from, the Harbour of New York with the Bartholdi Statue of Liberty, and the striking features of the eastern entry to the United States, around him.

On leaving "New York Harbour," the visitor's first excursion will be through the various States across the Continent to San Francisco—from the Atlantic to the Pacific seaboard. He will pass collections illustrating the wealth and civilisation of the several States from east to west, from north to south.

The railway routes and the picturesquely diversified scenery of the agricultural, pastoral, forest, and mining States will be illustrated by paintings, plans, and products. The resources and characteristic productions of the various parts of the vast territory extending between the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts will thus be exposed to view almost as fully as to a tourist passing through the country, and with greater facilities of comparison.

The "Trip Across the American Continent" will, doubtless, be one of the most instructive and popular features of the Exhibition.

Interest in the American Exhibition is still further enhanced by the fact that it has been decided to open a Colonial Exhibition in London in 1886, so that there will be a friendly rivalry on the part of Australia, Canada, and India with the United States. This new feature in London life will be sure to contribute many thousands of visitors to the large number expected in 1886, and thus bring about an accession of visitors to the American Exhibition; for those who are attracted to London by the Colonial Exhibition will not fail to profit by the opportunity afforded them of paying a visit also to the American Exhibition, and vice versâ. The Times (London) remarks, in its issue of September 17th, 1884, that "there is a certain fitness in the proposal that a great Colonial and great American Show should take place simultaneously." The result of concurrently holding these two great Exhibitions of collections from the United States of America on the one hand, and the British Colonies on the other, will accordingly be to bring together the whole of the English-speaking world, and to furnish an opportunity for making acquaintance with every part of the earth in which a native of the British Isles would find himself, as it were, among his own people.

It is anticipated that the United States Government will send a unique collection, representing the Treasury Department of Engraving and Printing, the drawings of the coast survey, the models and lights (gas, oil, and electric) of the Lighthouse Board, the varied apparatus of the Life-saving Services, the weights, measures, and the delicate and ingenious chemical and mechanical gauges of the Customs and Inland Revenue department.

From the War Department are expected torpedoes, models, and methods of submarine mining, outfits and appurtenances of military engineer field service, also every variety of artillery, rifles, and small arms generally.

The Department of Agriculture will be invited to show examples of the maize, wheat, and cotton, the flocks and herds of the great Republic, and of the methods employed for raising and improving them. The trappers' art in the wilder regions of the continent will be illustrated, and the Society of American Taxidermists will be asked to contribute a large group of birds with brilliant plumage, of mammals, from the grizzly bear of the Rocky Mountains downwards, and reptiles; while in another Department the visitor may learn the taste of canvas-back duck and terrapin soup.

The Bureau of Education will have an opportunity of showing the methods of the public and mixed schools by which education in the United States is brought within the reach of so large a body of the population, and in this section it is especially proposed to present the successful efforts of the Department of the Interior in the instruction of the Indian and the negro, as conducted at Hampton (Virginia), under the superintendence of General Armstrong, and also at Carlisle (Pennsylvania), under that of Captain H. D. Pratt. The Manufacturing Department of the Exhibition will comprise the development in every branch of that inventive genius which, in the United States, has reached so high a point, and, so far as possible, it is proposed to present the various processes in working order, by the aid of electricity, steam, gas, or hydraulic power.

A separate hall (the Industrial Hall) will be devoted to the handicrafts pursued by white, Chinese, Indian, and negro men and girls. The labour-saving machinery, by which manual toil is reduced to a minimum, will be plentifully exhibited. The systems of working the great trunk railways and canals, the oil wells, and the coal and silver mines will be shown, together with the machinery and organisation by which American manufactures are produced. Not only sightseers, but manufacturers, land-owners, commercial men, farmers, all who are interested in stock-raising, and all who think of emigration, will find much to study in the Exhibition. Some of its results will, therefore, certainly be to increase the investments of capital in American enterprises, to attract a higher class of settlers to the United States, and to augment the export trade of America, while affording to Europeans and visitors from the Colonies a unique opportunity of obtaining much valuable information of a most varied and useful character.

Medals in gold, silver, and bronze, and diplomas of honour will be awarded on the recommendation of juries composed of eminent Englishmen in each profession, trade, and branch of industry represented.

Of course the characteristic amusements of the American people will not be forgotten. At an American theatre, it is proposed that performances shall be given by American actors, and by the negro singers who keep alive the reminiscences of plantation life and minstrelsy. The Art Department, the Theatre, and the Concert Room will be under the management of eminent artists and impresarios.

A number of the best known American Artists in Europe and America have undertaken to furnish the Fine Art Galleries, and, amongst many other works, will be portraits of the most prominent personages—soldiers, preachers, politicians, lawyers, bankers, inventors, merchants, writers, and actors—of the United States.

There will be in connection with the Exhibition such sports as may be practicable, including roller-skating, base-ball playing, lacrosse, trotting matches, bicycling tournaments, billiards, and the American variations of every form of recreation which is popular in the old country.

The principal phases of American life will be represented in the Exhibition, from a broker's office in Wall Street to the camp fires of Nevada. A Californian wine-shop; Florida fruit stores; an Indian village; Indian canoe-makers and mat-weavers; ice-drink pavilions and bars; restaurants, with the products of the Eastern and Pacific coasts, and of the Northern and the Southern States, characteristically prepared and served by white and coloured male and female cooks and waiters, will help to mark the peculiarities and variety of American social development. Arrangements are being made to include a Press Pavilion; an Atlantic Cable Office; an Electrical Elevated Railway; and reproductions of the façades and interiors of remarkable hotels and public buildings.

Arrangements are being made for an invitation by the Freemasons of England to delegates of the American Freemasons to appear at the opening ceremonies. Similar proposals are on foot for the holding in England of the moveable meetings for 1886 of American learned Societies and other similar bodies. Among the members of many representative associations, a celebrated American regiment, with its band of skilled musicians, and an American Fire Engine corps, are expected to pay a visit to London during the Exhibition. This, it is believed, will be the first organised trip to Great Britain of an American military force, and it will be made, if possible, to coincide in date with the Wimbledon Meeting, in order that the volunteer military services of the two countries may meet together on a friendly footing worthy of the feelings of mutual esteem which characterise the present relations of the two kindred nations.

The plan of the proposed Exhibition has been received with enthusiasm in America, and is meeting with an amount of practical support there, as in Great Britain, which cannot fail to make the display national and representative in the fullest sense of the terms.

As an evidence of the cordial feeling shown towards the Exhibition in this country, it may be added that, on joining the Council of Welcome, members have supplemented their expressions of adhesion by others of approval and encouragement, and by voluntary offers of hearty co-operation. The opinion has been generally expressed that an occasion like the present should be seized for publicly recognising and strengthening the ties of friendship and regard at present happily existing between communities which have the strongest motives for an amicable understanding. The Exhibition has already served to stimulate and give expression to the desire which prevails, both in the United Kingdom and the United States, for a more intimate mutual knowledge and appreciation. The international sympathies which have been evoked are neither feeble nor insignificant; and it has been observed that to maintaining and enhancing them we may most confidently look for a continuance of material and moral progress on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Press.

“The Times” (London), September 17th, 1884.

“Among the many announcements of exhibitions to be held in all parts of the civilised world is the novel and somewhat bold programme of an American Exhibition to take place in London in 1886, and though it appears to savour of carrying the war into the enemy’s country, there is much to be said in favour of such a scheme. The United States, although the social and industrial rapprochement with this country increases every day, are still too much unknown as a whole, notwithstanding that certain States are as familiar to Englishmen as Yorkshire or Wales. The promoters of the proposed exhibition have already received abundant promises of assistance and encouragement from the United States Government and the authorities of the various States and Territories, and from well-known American firms. Although the leading idea will naturally be to present to the English eye the industrial resources and manufactures of the States, in all of which labour-saving machinery will be conspicuous, it is intended to reproduce the main features of social life in the shape of art, education, and amusement; while, as far as possible, the exhibition will present a kind of panoramic sequence, the visitor entering at the harbour of New York and progressing from the Atlantic to the Pacific sea-board. The year 1886 will apparently be a busy one in exhibitions, and there is a certain fitness in the proposal that a great Colonial and great American Show should take place simultaneously.”
